Webster Outs Griffin as HOMOSEXUAL!!!

From 1990

Nick Griffin, the new leader of the British National Party, has been accused of having a secret homosexual past by Martin Webster, the former national activities organiser of the National Front. Webster claims the two men had a four-year affair in the late seventies. The allegation, strenuously denied by Griffin, is set to cause huge embarrassment to a party that entered the 1997 general election with a pledge to outlaw homosexuality and sees Aids as "Nature taking revenge" against gay men.

Webster made his allegations in his own newsletter, Loose Cannon, Salvo 1, in an article titled "Come on an Outing down memory lane". He claims to have been spurred into action because of Griffin's hypocrisy. "The reader should not condemn Griffin for his bi-sexual nature or conduct," writes Webster, "but for his lying hypocrisy which, like a malignant incubus, demands ever-increasing sustenance".

Griffin's affair with Webster began in 1976 and continued throughout the period he was studying at Cambridge University. It lasted four years, during which time Griffin, often at his own insistence, stayed with Webster four or five times a year.

One former NF organiser said: "He [Griffin] was very ambitious and also quite jealous of Joe Pearce, who was starting Bulldog off and trying to become leader of the Young National Front. Nick was desperate to move to London and started writing to Webster offering his services as it were. Nick eventually got a letter from Webster inviting him down to London, he showed it to me in the pub one evening. I said to Nick 'You're not going to accept it are you?' He asked why he should not, so I told him that Webster was always trying to sleep with the young men who wanted to go down to London and meet him. He said that he did not care, he was so desperate to get involved in the running of the YNF ahead of Pearce.

"This was in 1976 I think," he added. "After he went down there, he continued going back at every opportunity possible until he eventually secured a job or something down there. He certainly never had an issue with Webster being gay particularly as he always wanted to stay with him."

Webster makes reference to an incident where Griffin "earned wolf-whistles from 40+ guests at one of my parties by giving me a very affectionate birthday greeting".

This party was held at Webster's London flat in May 1980. According to one person present that evening the party was well under way when Griffin appeared, dressed in a pin-stripe suit. "He came in and, meeting Webster in the hallway, threw his arms around him and kissed him openly on the mouth. It was all quite blatant and not the sort of greeting you'd expect from a heterosexual man."

Glad-handing

Griffin was well aware that he could be "outed". After a chance meeting at the business premises of the nazi printer Anthony Hancock, when Webster ignored Griffin's outstretched hand, the two men exchanged letters either side of the New Year. In his reply to Griffin, Webster wrote:

"My reaction to the familiar tone of your letter is much the same as my response to your attempt to 'glad hand' me at Uckfield: a mixture of amazement and anger. In both instances you attempted to treat with me as if there were no events in our shared past, and no outstanding issues arising therefrom, which must, sooner or later, be brought to a resolution."

Referring to a telephone conversation seven years earlier, when Griffin allegedly made derogatory remarks about Webster's sexuality, Webster wrote: "Have you ever spared so much as a second to reflect how those events affected me then, and my life subsequently? I have not forgotten your several efforts to inflict injury on me and mine years after there was the slightest political pretext for such malignancy other than your desire to distance yourself ostentatiously from me in the hope of obliterating the four years of our intimate friendship and, thereby, insulating yourself from the retrospective curiosity of homophobic cranks."

Webster concluded: "In the light of my personal experience of you and the political consequences of your actions, can you wonder why your outstretched hand was not grasped with fervour and your letter not responded to with alacrity? Unresolved issues from the past involving injustice, betrayal and cruelty are like ghosts: they will not cease their haunting until they are decently laid to rest."

The correspondence between the two men only adds weight to Webster's allegation. If Griffin has despised Webster because of his homosexuality for so long, as he has claimed, why then did he become embroiled in swapping letters and "glad-handing" him?

As the BNP leadership battle got under way rumours of an impending exposé were rife among party members. Griffin decided to go on the offensive and head off any attempt by Webster to reveal his homosexual past. In a highly controlled interview in Tony Lecomber's The Patriot, Griffin sought to smear the former NF organiser: "[Webster], in addition to having a vicious temper and chronic inability to delegate, had been widely known for years to be a predatory homosexual".

It was this comment, coupled with Griffin's outrageous remarks in an article in Spearhead after the Soho bomb, in which he seemed to excuse the bombing, that pushed Webster into action.

In an ominous turn of phrase, Webster concluded his document by saying that Griffin "should have had the common sense to let sleeping dogs lie.

"But they misconstrued my silence as a sign that I was tongue-tied with embarrassment and that they could get away with saying what they liked - a big mistake. In Griffin's case, homophobic clap-trap descended into a vicious mania."

Griffin immediately denied the allegation when the story broke in The Sunday Times on 5 September. "It's a pack of lies from a spiteful old man," he told the paper. "I've got four children and I've been married 14 years."

While Griffin hid from subsequent press enquiries, his newly installed chief poodle, Lecomber, was actively taking up his defence. In an almost hysterical tone, Lecomber circulated a rebuttal to BNP organisers around the country. Entitled "Warning: Anti-BNP Fairy Tales", it described Webster as an "unsavoury figure", before going on to claim his allegations were the work of an

"embittered" old man seeking revenge for Griffin's role in ousting him from the NF in 1983.

Lecomber's vociferous outburst may well be aimed at hiding his own knowledge of Griffin's affair with Webster. In his outing of Griffin, Webster recounted a lunch with Lecomber on 28 January this year, and subsequent correspondence, where he told him of the affair. According to Webster's account of the meeting, "Lecomber coughed dryly into his Kronenburg".
A sexual predator

Webster does not confine his evidence of Griffin's homosexuality to his personal experience. In his document he refers to two other incidents in the mid-eighties in which Griffin attempted to have a sexual liaison with other men. The first was when a south London NF organiser stumbled across Griffin and a woman naked, only to be invited to "get your kit off and join us".

The second incident related to a former policeman who, on spending the night at Griffin's parents house in Suffolk, woke to find Griffin attempting to climb into his bed in "an evident state of arousal".

The second incident relates to a former NF activist from south London who, on stumbling across Griffin and two friends, was invited by Griffin to join them.
"If it's true, he can't be leader"

Reaction within the BNP to the allegations has been mixed. Tyndall's supporters tend to agree with the basic tenet of Webster's document, while supporters of Griffin dismiss it as lies. However of the latter group not all are completely at ease. Many are privately ruffled by the claims, though, with their political future tied up in Griffin's leadership bid, seem willing to fight his case.

Griffin's support may not remain totally solid. Among those who are prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt, there is a belief that if the allegation is true his future will not be secure. Walter Carr, the BNP's Worcester organiser, summed up this feeling when he said "a homosexual cannot be leader of this party". Bruce Cowd agreed, though refused to accept the allegation. If not, why not?

If Griffin's denial is to be believed then it seems strange that he has not reached for his lawyers. To date, neither Webster nor The Sunday Times have received anything even resembling a complaint, let alone a writ. It begs the question, if not, why not? Considering the damage that persistent rumours and innuendoes about his sexuality could inflict on his political career, Griffin's silence speaks volumes, looking conspicuously like guilt.

With the dried blood stiff on my temples I climbed the hill, cursing the satanic way of men, yet knowing myself vile, for they had not known what they were doing, but I betrayed an innocent; and the tears - weak, whiskey tears - would not wash from my brow the blood of a little brother.

Webster has never said that you lying arsehole !

The National Alliance perhaps one of the most HARDLINE pro-White organisations in America & one with which we also have VERY SIGNIFICANT IDEOLOGICAL & tactical differences.

This is total BULLSHIT!

The reason JT left the NF was because the membership voted against him expelling Webster for being a homosexual. By then Webster would have been climbing up Griffins dirtbox. Face facts, Griffin is a closet POOF!

From the facts it looks like that closet door is pretty wide open to me.

No one in their right mind would trust Griffin in the first place. I lived in the UK for a while and everyone I talked to thought he was a pompous ass. If this is the best the BNP can do I'd vote UKIP!

When JT left the NF there was a homo clique controlling the party. It comprised of;

Patrick Harrington

Ian Anderson

Martin Webster

Nick Griffin

And Joe Pierce couldn't keep his trousers on chasing other members wives.

Was Anderson a poof? I have to admit I didn't know that. I'm sure he was the top man when I joined in the 80's! Still looking back, nothing supprises me about a croud who blew the best chance WN had in my generation.
