Canadian "Human Rights" Commission lawyer - Richard Warman

Well, it wasn't long in coming. Ottawa bureaucrat and censor at the Canadian Human Rights Commission, Richard Warman has a very thin skin. In his private and public capacities, he writes to ISPs to try to get them to stop service to political websites (Fred Kyburz, for one) he doesn't like. He writes to libraries to demand that they pull copies of a book (David Icke's CHILDREN OF THE MATRIX) which he doesn't like. He drags dissident websites (Kyburz and others) before Canadian Human Rights Tribunals. He writes to meeting halls to demand that they cancel bookings for speakers he disapproves of (Tom Kennedy, Dave Lindsay).

Yet, let someone call this man an enemy of free speech, and he goes ballistic, with threats of libel suits. He pulled this same intimidation technique a little while ago when the Northern Alliance had the temerity on its website to call him an enemy of freedom.

Last weekend, in a meeting of enemies of free speech on the Internet, Warman was asked by a member of the audience about such websites as the Heritage Front and B.C. White Pride, which he hadn't mentioned in his talk. He said: "They just move to a U.S. server, but, mark my words, their time is coming!"

I ask, as I did in our press conference, Wednesday in the Parliamentary Press Gallery: What gives this public servant the right to threaten the free expression of political opinions by his fellow Canadians.
